Two men stand out in bold relief as champions for the uplifting and advancement of their race—Booker Washington and Prof. W. E. B. Du Bols. Their methods are, however, widely different and apparently opposed. Mr. Washington believes first and foremost in a practical education for his people one that will fit them for work, putting more stress on the importance of training their hands rather than their milnds and discouraging always the agitation.

There are about as many Secretaries in Washington as officials, for what official would have any dignity or prestige in the Federal community without a Secretary? They are especially numer-ous at the Capitol, and very especially numerous at the Senate, where some of the Senators have two or three or more each. They have fallen a-foul of Vice President Sherman, or Vice President Sherman has fallen a-foul of them, and there is war. It might be added that the fortunes of this war are all on the side of the Vice President. The red-cushioned chairs and sofas

The red-cusnioned chairs and solas at the rear of the Senate Chamber are nice and cozy, as the Secretaries found out long ago. There is an air of distinction and ease in the enjoyment of floor privileges, which the Secretaries tinction and ease in the enjoyment of floor privileges, which the Secretaries realize, even if they have to stand leaning against the Senate's walls when the red-cushioned chairs and sofas are all filled. So numerously have the Secretaries of one's hands. Those most active in sustaining him are doing so for ing against the Senate's walls when the red-cushioned chairs and sofas are all filled. So numerously have the Secretaries been crowding around and conversing uproariously that the Vice President believes they disturb orderly procedure. He has ordered a stricter enforcement of the rules, which keep the Secretaries off the floor, except on particular occasions when they have business, and nearly every Secretary is rushing to his Senator with protests. The controversy is spirited and bitter, and the Vice President announces that unless the Secretaries keep within bounds he will announce that the Sergeant-atarms is not efficient in enforcing orderly conduct among the Senate's employes.

It seems to have succeeded in driving the stalwart faction away as the tariff enactment of the first session and the legislative proceedings of the second session drove the insurgents away from him. But, as has been made very apparent, it has not pacified the insurgents in the slightest, and in some instances at least, strangely, enough, has further embittered them.

The facts are that the President's legislative achievements during the 61st Corgress have been disastrous politically.
